Once upon a time, there was a boy named Ammar who loved adventures very much.

One day, when Ammar was walking in the forest near his town, he found a huge man holding an axe and an arrow in his hand, trying to hunt a small brown bear. Ammar quickly threw stones at the hunter until he ran away.

He rescued the little bear, took him to town, and cared for him until he got better and they became close friends.

The hunter Mazen was a huge man who loved hunting very much. He lived in the forest. He had no home. He would attack people in the forest and ask them to bring him food. Whoever talked to him would be beaten. One day, while he was chasing a rabbit, he entered a cave...

5 There, a snake bit his leg. Ammar and the bear were walking in the forest and heard the hunter's call. They went and saved him.

The hunter felt very ashamed, so he apologized to the bear and Ammar, and promised them that he would never hunt again, and they took him home with them.

7 Ammar offered food to Mazen and said to him, "Why don't you build a house?" Mazen said, "I will build a house tomorrow." Ammar replied, "I will help you."

In the morning, Ammar and Mazen started collecting nails, and the next day they completed building the house in a town near Ammar's house. Ammar, the bear, and Mazen the hunter became friends, and they ate together to celebrate the completion of building the house...
